Riches to Bags

Sacrifices of an American Patriot

The Story of John Michael Chambers

All of the key figures in history, whether dead or alive, share one key trait: they are common people with uncommon talents, gifts, and vision. In every instance, they can see what others miss, are enthusiastic about doing what others will not, and achieve what no one has ever imagined.

While many are driven by the force of ambition, most were going to be historic achievers whether or not they wanted it. Their passion, skills, and tenacity are invisible forces that providentially propel them into leadership, adversity, and life challenges that would overwhelm most people but ultimately define their role in history. John Michael Chambers, from Long Island, is such a man.

The highlights of his legacy include:

- Founded American Media Periscope (AMP), a cutting edge Conservative news network.
- Publishing 5 books, with one best seller on Amazon.
- Supported and helped to launch numerous Patriot podcasters.
- Established a wartime website portal.
- Supported many non-profits, including Operation Underground Railroad, founded by Tim Ballard, to rescue and rehabilitate children from a life of sex trafficking.

But the journey of a patriotic leaders is never a straight path, nor an easy one. Every step is a new beginning, requiring unforeseen skills. Patriotic success is always met with fierce opposition. Perseverance and help from others are necessary to survive. The simple progression of John's is any easy read, but the accounts of experiencing his journey are what we focused on in a recent conversation. For those that like to read the end of the book first, beginning in 2020, John went through periods of successes, obstacles, and achievements:

John sat down with Andrew Magazine to discuss his life’s journey, his achievements, failures, friendships, businesses, and ultimately his destiny in history. For those who want to get the more complete story, we encourage you to continue John’s life story over forty years ago.

“I’m always looking for the why in anything. Once you find the why, then the solutions show up, or at least an understanding. So in this case it was an understanding, and the solution followed.”

Individuals who are exceptionally privileged typically have little expectation of greatness. Most young people have aspirations greater than their parents, and in America those aspirations are most often fulfilled. In John’s case, he was gifted with an analytic mind, a charming personality, a diplomatic tone, an ability to read people, a curious spirit, and a heart of servanthood. He parlayed those skills into an exceptionally thriving wealth management business with six offices in three states. Through hard work, he almost effortlessly became one of the most successful wealth managers in the country. But something greater was calling him.

Several friends and clients planted intellectual curiosity seeds within him. He wondered how the world’s economic systems worked and why they were the way they were. His view of the world was expanding. He began to learn about how the Federal Reserve was established and how the politically well-connected dynasties were operating beyond the margins of global regulations. As his wealth management company prospered, the regulations under which he operated were changing. Gradually, those regulations prohibited him from providing the best wealth management advice to his clients. Perhaps yours is too.

“My career became more mechanical. It wasn’t much of a challenge, and the regulations became so prohibitive I couldn’t do it anymore. It was a life that sucked the life out of me. So, I was at the height of my game, and I was ready for another pivotal change, ending twelve years of a career across six offices and three states.”

Success: Frustrated Financial Advisor

So he shifted gears, launched a financial advisory consultancy, and closed down his wealth to two suitcases. Life was simple, his mind was clear, and he felt liberated.

John does not profess to be a religious man, but he acknowledges that there must be a god, and God has a calling in his life. As he waited for God, he wrote a series called "Misconceptions and Course Corrections". It was a cathartic experience for him, and then disaster struck. John suffered a massive concussion in a mountain hiking accident. And that was when God took a turn in his life.

John was out of money, severely injured, and, like many historic figures, John was seemingly without hope.

It is times like these that God provides a way, a light to get them out of darkness. In John's case, that person needed John's help, and he also had the means to push John forward. Dr. Richard Davis of Florida was that person.

Dr. Davis had been a successful doctor, inventor, and political activist. From the very beginning, he was one of the most faithful supporters of SAF. In turn, he trusted John to get things done for the Tea Party movement, and now America needed them both.

Societal Prognosticator

In 2016, Dr. Davis was concerned about election integrity and took it upon himself to fund the creation of a mobile app to address that issue. The app was called PoleMole, and it was created to collect exit poll data from actual voters. By registering their vote in a secure environment, accurate vote estimates could be calculated. He was concerned that the 2016 election would be stolen. Poll Mole's Facebook profile claimed "the goal is to have at least 20 million voters use this app for polling, particularly on the exit poll on election day Nov 8—you vote for your candidate, and your vote is registered in the cloud, and the votes are tracked by the Poll Mole system." Dr. Davis asked John to return to the US to run a media campaign and raise money, which he did with gusto. Meanwhile, a thirty year friend named Rick hosted John in his beautiful home, provided a car, a modest salary, and the seed money John needed to launch his next venture. While Poll Mole was not as successful as Dr. Davis had hoped, John gratefully supported the friend who had helped him through tough times.

When Donald Trump announced his presidential candidacy, John was all in. During his free time with Dr. Davis and with renewed hope, he launched JohnMichaelChambers.com and wrote "What One Man Can Do: America's Last Stand." It was picked up and promoted by Bill Mitchell and Anne Vandersteel, who interviewed him, promoted his books, and launched him into a new national audience. And with that modicum of success, he now had financial clients and revolutionary followers to speak to. He drove around the country in a faithful Toyota Corolla with its trunk filled with books, speaking at financial workshops and conferences, and then selling his books everywhere he went. He was getting by, but not ahead.

economic collapse of 2008 was looming around the corner. As he traveled across the entire state of Florida and other states, his notoriety and popularity grew.

"I knew I was effective in waking people up and pointing where to look, if they were willing to look. I could say, 'No, you're not crazy.' I had clout being a speaker and being with people."

Change: Life's Calling

Eventually the Tea Party movement was infiltrated and targeted by the IRS, and it all collapsed. By 2011, John was exhausted, his marriage was in ruins, he wasn't making any money, the economy was tumbling, and he went through a brief period of confusion, frustration, and remorse. He vividly recalled President Bush and Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson demanding $1.7T to save the global banking system and America. The Federal Reserve printed the money, the banks were saved, the money was absconded, 3.8 million homes were foreclosed on, and no bankers went to jail.

John's new destiny was becoming ever clearer, even as his income collapsed and his personal debt rose. With climbing interest rates on his debt, he vowed to pay them off and never use bank credit again, which he has done to this day. Money, houses, and cars had all become a trap, and they were all gone.

He could clearly see that both Bush and Obama were going to collapse the American economy. Bush destroyed it. He passed it over to Obama.

Challenges: Family and Forfeiture

John's marriage was hanging by a thread, and his Chinese wife's parents needed help in mainland China. To save his marriage and care for his in-laws, they moved. Meanwhile, Obama Care was a fait accompli in the US, and the first great money grab in healthcare and insurance was in full motion.

John sold everything, resigned from the SAF board, and moved to China to help his in-laws. The move never healed his marriage nor his confidence in America. About a year later, he moved throughout Southeast Asia and the Caribbean in search of his next life reinvention.

He had been studying Mao, Lenin, and Marx for many years. He was very familiar with their tactics, and he was one of the earliest to see where Obama was taking the country. He had lost all confidence that America could be saved, and that is when his life changed. All of his worldly possessions had been reduced management company. The advisory services enabled him to provide the best advice to his clients, even though it meant much less income. But that gave him more time to pursue his expanded curiosity about money, the flow of money, the controls on money, and the global power brokers.

While regulations prevented him from selling gold or silver to his clients, he was buying as much as he could afford. Instead, he recommended that his clients talk to precious metal brokers about how they could help round out their portfolios. At that time, the brokers could reward him with a commission if his clients made a purchase. Regulations are now changing that possibility as well.

Adventure: Breaking Free

As he would do throughout his career, he used a bridging model to bring his former clients to his new consultancy. This model included holding seminars through which he would expand his client base. It was an exhilarating and liberating time—for a short while.

The lesser demands of the advisory services allowed John time to write several songs (even though he cannot read music) and to conceive his future options. Around 2008, the Tea Party movement was blossoming across America, and he spotted a gap they were not filling. He and a board of directors created Save America Foundation (SAF), a 501c4 non-profit to unite the Tea Party factions across Florida. He was now pivoting into the Tea Party movement, and his new career as communicator and conservative provocateur was launched. He would soon abandon his income and financial career once again.

SAF was holding massive conferences across the country. The demand for information grew stronger after they launched his radio show. He was still running his financial consultancy as the banking, housing, and

The proceeds were just enough to cover his expenses, but rarely enough to save. But his dual-model strategy was taking form. Both the financial and the revolutionary audiences were beginning to blend.

Trump – Manhattan Pariah to President

Every movement needs a leader, and national movements need a transformative leader. Donald Trump was the most unexpected leader of the 21st century. Like many New Yorkers, John had a genuine dislike of Donald Trump. Many New Yorkers hate him because of his brash bravo, but they admired his ability to get things done. His NBC "Apprentice" shows ran for 14 years, elevated the Trump brand, exposed Ivanka and Donald Jr. to the national audience, and made their business over $217 million. But John foresaw a great businessman leader for America at a time when he was needed most. John quickly set aside his emotional assessment of Trump and jumped onboard. In 2017, he published "Trump and the Resurrection of America: Leading America's Second Revolution."

With the recent upset of the century, the shadow government of this world has experienced its first real setback with the election of Donald J. Trump as President of the United States. The globalists now tremble as Trump and this movement threaten their totalitarian world government. Although optimism has returned, the battle now begins as President Donald J. Trump leads America's second revolution.

Alex Jones and Infowars – The Launch

But it was his connection with Sandy Greeley that landed his book, "Trump and the Resurrection of America," on Will Johnson's desk. Will Johnson, a black recovering Democrat in California and an influential patriot podcaster at Unites America First., and contributor to Infowars. Will interviewed John and sent the video interview and book to Alex Jones, who ran with it on his Infowars show, and subsequently interviewed John three times. That turned the corner for John. 750K viewers saw John for the first time, and his cell phone and website just lit up.

Dr. Alan Keys picked up where Alex Jones left off, and now John's voice was being heard loud and clear throughout the conservative movement of America. Over time, he established long term, trusted relationships with Steve Bannon, Roger Stone, Alex Jones, Clay Clark, LTG. Mike Flynn, Alan Keys, Juan O'Savin, and a host of other mercenary patriots.

American Media Periscope Launches

That is where John's life story that you read at the opening pivoted to becoming an author of 5 books and launching American Media Periscope (AMP), now PatriotTV. John was very circumspect about his life's story and the journey he has been on. He has transitioned his leadership to others, yet he remains in the fight. The 21st century battle to restore America to its core principles of God given rights enumerated in its Constitution and the expectation of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness is not for the meek or weak hearted.

As we closed our discussion with John, he affirmed that there are jealousies and squabbles among many of the popular conservative leaders. Occasionally they spill out into the public square. But the public should make no assumptions about their differences. They all remain united in restoring America to greatness again.

Today, John keeps the public informed, empowered, and connected through his channels at "A Voice for Our Times", a daily wartime information portal, StormIsUponUs.com, and broadcasts his popular weekly show "40,000 Foot View" and "Intel and Insights" with Juan O'Savin.

What's next for JMC? He said, "Only God knows, and at the right time I will know too. For now, I'm in my space fighting the fight."

In his closing remarks, he said, "Most of us have the security of age and savings to rely on. It is incumbent upon us to welcome and train the future conservative leaders who will eclipse us. It is my hope that the story of my journey is an inspiration of hope for them."

"Everything will be okay in the end. If it's not okay, it's not the end. Never ever give up."
